CORRESPONDENCE.

MORGAN COUNTY.

West Liberty Doings.

County court Monday. No business of importance transacted.

W. T. Colvin is now traveling for Trimble Bros., of Mt. Sterling.

Mrs. Sam Wheeler is on the sick list and is now in the country.

Jas. H. Swango, of your place, was in our midst Monday. He will begin a select school here on February 8.

A man whose name we never learned, rode his horse over a cliff more than one hundred feet high, while on his way from Morehead. It is needless to say he was drunk.

Caney Cullings.

Big John Dancy, of Montgomery county, the great cattle buyer of Eastern Kentucky, was the guest of R. E. and J. T. Caullid Sunday night, en route to Johnson and Floyd counties to buy cattle.

The protracted meeting closed Monday on Caney with 28 conversions and 9 additions to the church.

David Williams and Mrs. Joe Williams, widow of the late Joe Williams, were united in the holy bonds of matrimony on the 22nd inst. Daves last wife was a sister to his first one, and Joe Williams was his cousin. May they live long and be happy is the wish of your scribe.

Uncle Lash Oney, of White Oak, Magoffin county, killed himself last Saturday by hanging with a rope. He had been losing his mind for some time, and Saturday morning he arose and put on his best clothes and had his son George shave him for the purpose of going to the quarterly meeting held just above where he lived, but instead of going to church he went up the branch to the house where Dock Oney moved from and tied the rope round a rafter and swung down through the loft and passed into eternity. His funeral was preached Monday and he was buried Tuesday.

NED.

Soliers Sunshine.

Born, to the wife of Wm. Easterling, a girl.

Boon Long went to Campton on business last week.

John Hays, of Montgomery county, passed through here Sunday.

James Yocum was in this neighborhood buying cattle.

Mrs. J. H. Wilson is attending her.

The infant child of Boon Phipps and wife died last week. They have the sympathy of the entire community in their affliction.

Married, on the 21st inst., at the residence of the bride's father, Sam O. Brown, Alexander Nickell to Miss Sadie Brown, Rev. R. F. Blauksens officiating. May their pathway be strewn with flowers, and may their greatest troubles be little ones.

Deputy United States Marshal Green Lacy and others captured Joe Long and Drue Lacy making mountain dew. While on their way to Salsburyville to have their examining trial, the boys broke guard and made a desperate attempt to escape, in which Long succeeded, but Lacy was recaptured, had his trial and is now in jail at West Liberty to await the action of the federal court.

Maytown Missiles.

Mr. Jo Clark, of your town, commenced the building for the roller mill here Monday morning.

L. T. Bolin, formerly of this town, but now of Jackson, was in town this week wanting a good carpenter for Jackson, but failed to get one.

H. C. Hord, of your town, has bought property here and will move to it.

G. W. Sexton, of Menard county, has rented property of widow C. A. Swango and has moved to town.

Mr. Ferguson, of Crassy creek, has moved to town and will run the engine for the Maytown mill.

E. W. Mcke, the boss miller, will move to your town this week. Mr. Haley also left us for your town. It is fine weather for moving.

J. W. Cravens, of your town, and W. R. Marks, of Knoxville, Tenn., were the guests of W. P. Smith Tuesday.

Maj. W. J. Hays stopped over night Monday night on his way home from Frankfort. He says the special can gallon liquor law of Morgan county will not be repealed this session of the legislature. We are sorry for our officials who advocated the repeal.

WIKESLESS.

A daily newspaper, with all the name implies, 312 days in the year, and THE HERALD one year, all for $2.50, is one of the miracles of cheap journalism. But we have arranged with the publishers of the Louisville Evening Post for this great combination. If you want daily market reports, or full and fair reports from Washington or Frankfort, you should send your subscriptions to us at once. The Evening Post does not color its news, as you get all the news straight. The state news of the Evening Post is the best department in any daily paper. Remember, The Evening Post and this journal for $2.50.

There will be a meeting held on Friday, the 7th of February, at the residence of Dink Murphy, on the Murphy fork of Grass, Elder Duncannon and other preachers will participate in the services. This meeting has been held annually on the same date for many years, and was instituted at the request of Old Uncle Billy Murphy, who died on the seventh day of February, the date just now not remembered.

Japanese Oil is said to be the most wonderful lubricant for external application that scientific chemists have yet been able to compound. Hundreds and thousands testify to this, as it has saved both life and expense. So at this office at 40 cents a bottle. Try it, as it is a household necessity and always a friend in need.

Jas. H. Swango, of this place, will begin a select school at West Liberty on Feb. 3, for a term of ten weeks. He will no doubt have a large school, and several teachers are expected to enroll, preparatory for examinations for certificates in the summer.

An Old Soldier's Recommendation.

In the late war I was a soldier in the First Maryland Volunteers, Company G. During my term of service I contracted chronic diarrhoea. Since then I have used a great amount of medicine, but when I found any that would give me relief it would injure my stomach, until Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy was brought to my notice. I used it and will say it is the only remedy that gave me permanent relief and no bad results follow. I take pleasure in recommending this preparation to all my old comrades, who, while giving their services to their country, contracted this dreadful disease as I did, from eating unwholesome and uncooked food. Yours truly, A. E. Bending, Halsey, Oregon. For sale by John M. Rose.

Bruce Marcum was last week sent to the penitentiary for one year from the Wolfe circuit court on charge of perjury in the issuance of a marriage license. Bruce is the son of Ned Marcum, of Breathitt county. The case will be appealed.

Mr. George W. Talcy, Benjamin, Missouri.

Good Advice

Cured of Rheumatism by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"G. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass."

"I was taken down with rheumatism over a year ago. I was sick for over six months. Often I would have given up, but I could hardly endure them. A friend sent me and advised me to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla and in ten days I was cured. I have taken eight bottles of it."

It Has Cured Me

When the doctors could do me no good what else? After being tormented so much from this medicine I describe Hood's Sarsaparilla as a wonderful medicine. I also advise every one who is troubled with rheumatism not to be without Hood's Sarsaparilla. I am a farmer, and the medicine has given me much energy and strength to perform my work. I am now well and happy. G. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Hood's Pills are made and prepared in proportion and appearance. See a box.

Come on and we'll try and attend your wants.

J. R. Barkley, a prominent timberman of East Tennessee, was the guest of his friend, N. L. Ware, of this place, Tuesday, and with that gentleman left Wednesday morning for the far side of this county on a prospecting tour.

Some time ago Mr. Simon Goldbaum, of San Luis Rey, Cal., was troubled with a lame back and rheumatism. He used Chamberlain's Pain Balm and a prompt cure was effected. He says he has since advised many of his friends to try it and all who have done so have spoken highly of it. It is for sale by John M. Rose.

During my term of service I contracted chronic diarrhoea, since then I have used a great amount of medicine, but when I found any that would give me relief it would injure my stomach, until Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy was brought to my notice. I used it and will say it is the only remedy that gave me permanent relief and no bad results follow. I take pleasure in recommending this preparation to all my old comrades, who, while giving their services to their country, contracted this dreadful disease as I did, from eating unwholesome and uncooked food. Yours truly, A. E. Bending, Halsey, Oregon. For sale by John M. Rose.

BATTLE WITH THE SWORD.

Students at Heidelberg Citing to the Duels in the University.

The duels of Heidelberg are very famous. There is perhaps no university in Germany at which dueling is not practiced, but at Heidelberg it is almost as a religious duty. The sons of the rich congregate at Heidelberg, and they are the people who are especially addicted to this form of student pastime in Germany. It is not an exaggeration to say that between 50 and 30 duels take place here every week during the semester, and these nearly all at the Hirschgasse, a little tavern on the corner from Heidelberg, which is known and advertised everywhere as the place of resort for such encounters. It has served in this capacity for a great many years. The signboard over the door is the emblem of the university. It is mentioned in the guide books and everyone knows of it except the university officials and the police. It is not a ten-minute walk from the center of the town, though it is outside of the city jurisdiction. This however seems to be a matter of no moment, for some of the clubs for a period last year fought in the town itself, at a tavern directly in the shadow of the old castle. There are duels here some three or four mornings every week by the members of the various fighting clubs, of which Heidelberg has an enormous number. The most aristocratic of them is the Saxo-Borussia. This club bears cartel relations with the Borussia of Bonn, to which the Hohenzollerns belong. Five or six duels between various combatants are usually fought on the same morning.

This is all a curious commentary on law and order as they are supposed to exist in Germany. Such machinery for the enforcement of law as is to be found here flourishes in no other land in the world, and yet, for one reason or another, the duel goes on unhindered. By the laws of the empire, without taking into account the penalties prescribed by the lower jurisdictions, there is the most severe punishment for dueling and challenging to duel. In spite of various attempts to make other interpretations, the student duels have, by the supreme court of the empire, been decided to be duels in the sense of the law. Yet publicly in the rebehat, no longer ago than last winter, an esteemed member of the Kaiser's ministry declared himself and his government to be at peace with the laws and the supreme court, but with whatever moral feeling there may be in the land against this unbecoming form of evil.

That there is a strong feeling against the systematic mutilation of the human face in the universities there can be no doubt, although it is sometimes difficult to discern. Those who are opposed to it, however, are so far removed from the dueling that they cannot make their influence felt. It is one of those abominations, of which there are several in Germany, that there will be no way to uproot until there is established a government which can rest in some way upon a free and responsible public opinion. Whatever the government of Germany is today, it is not this. Dueling is so common at Heidelberg that it is said sometimes by those who do not know their subject that all students fight. This is, of course, not true, though there is a relatively large proportion engaged at it. It is not so common at the universities. There are surely not more than 300 fighters out of a whole attendance of 1,300. This figure, however, may be slightly below the mark. —Philadelphia Telegraph.

PEDANTRY IN THE ARMY.

Specimens of Abundant Ignorance Upon Material Form.

"What made you leave the army at so early an age and with such a fair record behind you and so promising a career in front of you?" I once asked an officer, whose chief defect was a proneness to acquiesce in the head impulse. The purpose of his reply was: "At my last inspection I was questioned by the general concerning the prices of the soldiers' socks and shirts. I gave him to understand that I neither knew nor cared, and, of course, was pretty sharply reprimanded. I became so disgusted with this and similar absurdities of regimental pedantry that I sent in my papers. Once, as president of a board of officers to report on an accident to a horse, I simply stated that 'the leg was broken,' and received a rather sharp reprimand for embodying an opinion in such trivial language. Thereupon I made a report of the defect by suggesting that 'the tibia was fractured,' and was complimented for the satisfactory lucidity of my report. Tradition declares that in India a similar board reconvened to report that 'the elephant is dead and smells bad.' The general, in a towering passion, sent back the proceedings for revision, whereupon the board amended its report: 'The elephant is still dead and smells worse.' —Blackwood's Magazine.

REED'S STRANGE ACTION.

Guides Back the President's Message to Check Intimidation of Members.

The expected and predicted effect of the president's message on the Venezuela affair in the house was nullified by delay. It lay for hours on Mr. Reed's desk unopened and seemingly forgotten by the speaker. The house was very much excited to the arrival of the message, and when its importance was whispered about there was a strong undercurrent of excitement noticeable throughout the chamber. A debate was going on as to whether there shall be three committees to try the case, or contested seats or whether the old rule of one committee to hear all such cases should be followed.

Speaker Reed refused to break off the debate and have the president's message read, and a rumor that he was going so far to think out what the republican plan would be gained circulation. Mr. Reed was also charged with desiring to allow the members a time to read the message, which had come into the house in the form of a newspaper extra, before the president's warm advocacy of the Monroe doctrine should be read aloud by the clerk. In this way it was reasoned that the message would soon be an old story, or at least the edge would be taken off the interest in its contents and its reception diminished.

Whatever may have been the cause for delay, the message, although received soon after the house met at 10 o'clock, was not read until nearly five o'clock.

Ex-Speaker Crisp had in vain announced that there was a message from the president in defense of the Monroe doctrine. This was in answer to an inquisitorial Representative who asked the president was too busy duck-shooting to attend to business. Speaker Reed quieted the applause that broke out after Mr. Crisp's remarks and allowed the dreary debate as to the disposition of the contested-seat cases to drag along.

Then the democrats began to filibuster by demanding roll-calls on all sorts of motions relative to the contested seats until it looked as if they were determined to have the session end without the reading of the message, and thus put the republicans in the position of having set it aside for the day. Owing to this dreary delay, the crowds in the galleries despaired of hearing the message read and gradually thinned out.

Finally, at about 4:30, the contested-seat cases debate came to an end and the speaker announced a message from the president. By that time almost everybody in the house had read the message and the speaker proceeded without interruption until he came to the passage:

"Nothing remains but to accept the situation, to recognize its plain requirements and deal with it accordingly."

The democrats smiled at this and the republican started hand-clapping, which gradually grew until the whole house was applauding. The republicans again applauded and were joined by the democrats when the clerk read: "When such report is made and accepted, will in my opinion be the duty of the United States to resist by every means in its power as a willful aggression upon its rights and interests the appropriation by Great Britain of any land or the exercise of governmental jurisdiction over any territory which, after investigation, we have determined of right belonged to Venezuela."

The republicans again applauded when the clerk read the message, and, as he read the signature, "Grover Cleveland," the democrats joined in. Up jumped Mr. Crisp and Mr. McCreary. Mr. Crisp had a bill in his hand, and Mr. McCreary wanted to make a motion to refer the message to the committee on foreign affairs when it should be appointed. Speaker Reed made the reference to the committee himself, and Mr. Cannon made a motion to adjourn. The speaker refused to see Mr. Crisp, who was waving his bill in the air, and put the motion to adjourn, which was carried. The house broke up with very little excitement, but the members lingered longer than usual to talk over the message and the outlook.

The bill which Mr. Crisp tried to introduce read as follows:

"He is enacted by the senate and house of representatives in congress assembled, that the sum of $100,000 be and the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated to pay the expenses of a commission to be appointed by the president to investigate and report upon the alleged violation of the treaty between the republic of Venezuela and Great Britain."

Mr. Reed, besides, of the British embassy, sat in the diplomatic gallery throughout the reading of the message. —N. Y. World.

The republican party is an opportunist pure and simple. The issue which brought it its being long ago arrived to its logical conclusion, it has the last 30 years consumed the resources and devices of the baited dancer, again and again found on one leg and then on the other, and between the two contriving to make both ends meet. It has no claim which has not been overpaid. It has no convictions worth mentioning. —Louisville Courier-Journal.

Speaker Reed wants congress to do nothing and to do it mighty quick. —Indianapolis News.

BLOCKING BUSINESS.

The Republican Congress Is Caught Inactive.

The members of the 44th congress are acting very much like the inhabitants of a kicked ant heap. They are running around wildly, trying to find out what struck them out and who got hurt. Appeals to Reed have so far failed to induce him to do anything. The king ant was loosed in the shake up, and has not yet dug his way out.

Beyond the announcement of the committees absolutely nothing was done toward acting on the suggestion of Reed. Well at a cost of only $100 each in committee of ways and means is understood to be trying to arrange some plan for raising revenues, but the attempt seems to be of a very performance character.

If the senate are alone, or the house by itself, had to deal with this question it would be in an hour, but to produce a piece of legislation which will receive the assent of both houses is a task beyond Speaker Reed and he has practically admitted it by his conduct. There have been a dozen suggestions as to what should be done in order to provide revenues for the government, ranging all the way from Hill's suggestion to the coinage of all the silver in the treasury vaults. These two suggestions, opposite as they are, fairly illustrate the state of affairs in the two houses.

The house of representatives will have nothing to do with any bill that proposes the coinage of silver and the senate will have nothing to do with any bill which does not put the white metal in the forefront place. It appeared for a little while as if the proposition to issue a popular loan of one to three per cent. bonds of small denominations to be sold to the people at large, would go through, but when this proposition reached the senate it was bitterly opposed. Senator after senator spoke against it. Stewart said it was wrong policy and Dubois declared that the senate would never pass any bill that proposed a bond issue. His statement passed unchallenged.

Silver is the main point at issue in the senate. Reed's boom and the Platt Quay campaign are the controlling ideas at the other end of the corridor. Any proposition to reenact any part of the McKinley bill would be bitterly opposed by the combine because it would at once put McKinley prominently before the people and would seriously interfere with the presidential plans of Reed.

The republicans in the house attempt to clear their skirts by saying that any bill they might propose would be vetoed by the president. This is a wrong conclusion. Mr. Cleveland feels strongly on many subjects and under ordinary circumstances would undoubtedly veto a bill which conflicted with his personal ideas. In the present crisis, however, it is doubted if he would veto any bill that came to him indorsed by both senate and house, and he provided it was a clear and practical method of raising money.

Although both the president and Secretary Carlisle have recommended the retirement of greenbacks as a method of relieving the treasury, neither they both knew that such a measure would stand no show either in the house or the senate. Both houses have been pretty thoroughly policed and an overwhelming majority is against the proposition.

Several bills introduced by their opponents to add to the revenues of the government have been lately introduced. The one which has attained the most notice is that introduced by Representative Amos C. Swasey, providing for an issue of three per cent. bonds of small denominations as a popular loan. For the reasons given in the foregoing this bill has no chance of passing.

Mr. Hill, of Connecticut, thinks an increase in the duties on tobacco will bring several millions into the treasury. Quiver, of New York, is down on imported precious stones, and has introduced a bill providing for an increase in the duties. Bowers, of California, wants a high duty put upon the importations of fruits and nuts. There have been several other bills introduced looking to an increase in the tax on beer and in other internal revenue matters. Some of these might pass the house, but they will infallibly be blocked in the senate.

The house is willing to legislate for Mr. Cleveland if it can keep clear of silver. The senate will sit on every bill that is not silver plate. That is the situation. —Chicago Chronicle.

Sermon Which Appeals to the Uncontroverted Everywhere.

For the closing discourse of the year Rev. Dr. Talmage chose a subject which appeals to the unconverted everywhere—viz., The Philippian jailer. The text selected was, "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" (iii., 30). Incarcerated in a Philippian military, a place cold and dark and damp and loathsome and hideous, unillumined save by the torch of the official who comes to see if they are alive yet, the prisoners in this jailer's "feet fast in instruments of torture, their shoulders dripping from the stroke of leathern thongs, their mouths hot with inflammation of thirst, their eyes dimmed with tears, they lay and die down. In a comfortable room of the same building and amid pleasant surroundings is a paid officer of the government whose business it is to supervise the prison. It is night, and all is dark. The jailer is sleeping, but he is so sure as some murderer struggles with a horrid dream, or a ruffian turns over in his chains, or there is the cough of a dying consumptive amid the dampness of the walls, that he gets up and looks. The two clerjymen pass for the night in a full keep, although familiar with the darkness and horrors hovering around the dungeon, is startled by each sound, and, with a bamboo in hand, he comes to see if all is still. He is shouting at the top of his voice, "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?"

I stand low among those who are asking the same question with more or less earnestness, and I accost you in this crisis of your soul with a message from Heaven. There are those in this audience who might be more skillful in argument than I am; there are those here who can dive into deeper depths of science, or have larger knowledge; there are in this audience those before whom I would willingly bow as the inferior to the superior, but I yield to no one in this assemblage in a desire to have all the people saved by the power of an omnipotent gospel.

I shall proceed to characterize the question of the agitated jail keeper. He is a man who is not at all as courteous. He might have rushed in and said: "Paul and Silas, you vagabonds, are you tearing down the prison? Aren't you satisfied with diabolical doctrines? Aren't you spreading infamous doctrines? And are you now going to destroy public property? Back with you to your places, you vagabonds! He said no such thing. The question of food left him a great deal to say to "lords," recognized the majesty and the honor of their mission. Sirs! If a man with a capacious spirit tries to find out the way to heaven, he must find it in a man who comes out and pronounces all Christians as hypocrites, and the religion of Jesus Christ as a fraud, and asks irritating questions about the existence of God. He said to me, "Come, my wise man, explain this and explain that; if this be true, how can that be true?" no such man finds the way to Heaven. The question of the agitated jail keeper is courteous, gentlemanly, deferential. Sirs!

Again, I characterize this question of the agitated jail keeper by saying that it was a practical question. He was not asking for a philosophical answer, for the world, he did not ask how Christ could be God and man in the same person, he did not ask the doctrine of the decrees explained or want to know how the world was created, or why the cause of the earthquake. His present and everlasting welfare was involved in the question, and was not that practical? But I know multitudes of people who are bothering themselves about the non-practical chain of religion. What would you think of a man who should, while discussing the question of the light and heat of the sun, spend his time down to the bottom of the ocean, and go out and see the one and feel the other? Yet there are multitudes of men who, in discussing the chemistry of the gospel, spend their time down to the dun-geon of hell, and go out and see the one while he stands telling them to come into the moonday light and warmth of the sun of righteousness. The question for you, my brother, to discuss is whether Calvin or Arminius was right, whether the baptism of the Holy Spirit is a holy baptism or a baptistry is the water, not whether reformation and agency can be forced upon the people. The real question for you to discuss is whether the question is "Where will I find sterility?"

Again I characterize this question of the acclimated jail keeper as one personal to himself. I have no doubt he had the right to be as much interested in their welfare as I have no doubt he formed that there were persons in that prison who, if the earthquake had destroyed them, would have found their graves in the same place. I have nothing about them. The whole weight of his resolution turns on the pronoun "I."
 "What shall I do?" Of course, when he becomes a Christian, he immediately ceases to be interested in the welfare of other people, but until that is reached the most important question is about your own salvation.
 "What is to be my destiny?" "What prospects are before me in the future?"
 "Why am I going?" "What shall do?" The trouble is we shuffle the responsibility off on others. We prophesy a bad end to that incubator and terrific exposure to that defaulter and awful catastrophe to that profligate. We are so busy in weighing other people we forget ourselves. We are so busy in worrying about watching the poor gardeners that we forget to water our own. We are people that we let our own dooryard go to weeds. We are so busy sending off other people into the fire that we forget the wave. We cry "Lifeboat" because our own ship is sinking. We are down and seem to be uninterested although our own house is in the conflagration. O wandering thoughts, disappear to-day. Blot out this entire page. Do except yourself. Your sin, is it pardoned? Your death, is it provided for? Your heaven, is it assured? Is it your earthquake that that which demolished the Phillipian penitentiary will rumble about your ears. The foundations of the earth will give way. The earth will be a sea of dust. All the American cities into the dust. Cathedrals and palaces and prisons which have stood for thousands of years will topple like a child's play. The angels of the seas will submerge the sea. The Atlantic and Pacific oceans above the Alps and the Andes clasp their hands. What then will become of me? What then will become of you? I do not wonder at the anxiety of this man of my text, for he was in a sea and a storm, the falling of a prison, but the falling of a world.

Again, I remark, I characterize this question of the agitated jail keeper as being of comparative importance. Men are alike, and all men have questions of questions on his mind, but all questions for this world are hushed up, forgotten, annihilated in this one question of the text. "What must I do to be saved?" You know how my brother, any question of importance compared with that question? Is it a question of business? Your common sense tells you that you will soon forget it. You know how every well that you will soon forget of that partnership. You know that beyond a certain point of all the millions of dollars' worth of goods would you not handle a yard of cloth? And yet, if you were your own's worth. After that, if a configuration should sweep all Washington into ashes it would not touch you and it would not damage you. If every cash-merchant and every banker suspended payment, and if every company fail, it would not affect you. Oh, how insignificant is business this side the grave with business on the other side the grave! Have you ever asked yourself what is your mortality? Have you any securities that will last forever? Are you jobbing time when you might be wholesaling for eternity? Is there anything more than the base, multitudinous, so overshadowed by the question, "What must I do to be saved?" Or is it a domestic question? Is it something about father or mother or husband or wife or son or daughter? Will they be gone, before you will be gone? You know by universal and inexorable law the relation will soon be broken up. Father will be gone, mother will be gone, children will be gone, brothers will be gone, but after that the world will be yours. Will you be the greatest, chief giant, or deplore its worst losses, or roll up its mightiest magnitudes, or sweep its vaster circles.

Oh, what a question—what an important question! Is there any question that is more important to me than whether I shall live or die? What is it now to Napoleon III? Is he dead? Is he still alive? Is he still at Sedan, whether he died at the Tuilleries or Chislehurst, whether he was emperor or exile? Because he was laid out in the coffin in the great hall of field No. 1, and he will give me a better chance for the future than if he had been laid out in a plain shroud? What difference will it soon make to you or to me whether in this world we walked or rode, whether we were bowed to or bowed down, whether we were kicked or bludgeoned, whether we were insulted or abused at, welcomed in or kicked out? While laying hold of every moment of the future and burning in every splendor or every grief and overreaching or undergirding all time and all space, what difference will it make to me whether I shall live or die? I am, I feel, stupendous questioner of the future!

Next, "What must I do to be saved?"

[illegible]

Once you said: "Oh, if I could only have it quiet a little while!" It is so bring back people say that they would not miss. But if you have been faithful to God, bring back their departed friends from heaven even if they had the opportunity to, but if you had the opportunity you would bring back your loved ones, and you would be sounding like the man of the ball, and some of the things that would be heard in the family, and the other times would come back just as the first days of Christmas and Thanksgiving and New Year's. Oh, it is the earthquake that started the earthquake. This question—the earthquake of domestic misfortune. Death is a cruel, so devouring, so relentless, that it will show up our loved ones. We must be able to carry them whom we can carry our torn and bleeding hearts. We need a balance better than anything that ever existed. We need to be able to deal the pang of the soul. It is pleasant to see our friends gather around us and tell us how sorry they are and try to break up the loneliness, but nothing but the pain of the heart can take the heart of the son and put it in his heart. We must be able to deal with the hushing it with the lullaby of heaven. O brother! O sister! The gravestone will never be lifted from your heart. The heart of the heart is the heart of the loss of your friends, or the persecution of your enemies, or the overthrow of your worldly estate—was it not an earthquake that started you out to the text? This stupendous question of my text?

But I remark again, I characterize this question of the agitated jail-keeper as hasty, urgent and immediate. It is a question that is asked in the light of his torch as he goes to look for the apostles behind his face, the startled look and the set earnestness. No one can doubt by that look that he is asking a question that he must have that question answered before the earth stops rocking, or perhaps he will never have it answered at all.

Is that the way, my brother, that you ask your questions? Is it on the run? Is it hasty? Is it urgent? Is it immediate? If it is not, it will not be answered. That is the only kind of question that is answered. It is the question that is answered by the question of the gospel Christians. A great many are asking this question, but they draw it out, and they ask it in indifference in their manner, as if they do not care for the answer. A urgent question and then you will have it answered before an hour passes, before a minute passes. When a man asks a question, he is putting his soul on the line, he is putting his life on the line for God, he is finding him, and he finds him right away.

Oh, are there not in this house today those who are postponing until the hour of living the attending to the things that they should do? Do you suppose that ninety-nine out of the hundred deadbed repentances amount to nothing. Of all the scores of people mentioned as dying in the Bible, how many of them had repented successfully repented in the last hour?
Of 392? No. Of 492? No. Of 39? No.
Of 23? No. Of 149? No. Of 392? No.
Of 101—only 1, barely 1, as if to demonstrate that the possibility of repenting in the last hour. But that is improbable, awfully improbable, terrifically improbable. One hundred to one against it. You have never seen a man try to repent on his deathbed. You have never on have ever seen a man try to repent in the last hour, you have seen something very sad. I do not know anything on earth so sad as to see a man try to repent on his deathbed. You do not from the moment that life begins to breathe in infancy to the last gasp such an unfavorable, completely unfavorable, hour for repentance as the last hour of life. You have seen the doctors standing with the medicines. There is the lawyer standing with the half written will. There is the family in consternation as to the disposal of the remains of the deceased. There is the priest with the cells of eternity ready the soul out of the body. All the past rising before us and all the future. Oh, that man is an infinite fool who procrastinates until he has the deathbed his repentance.

My text does not answer the question. It only asks it, with deep and importunate earnestness asks it, and, according to the rules of sermouizing, it asks it again, and again, and again, some other time." But I dare not, what are the rules for sermouizing to me when I am after souls? What other me could I have, when perhaps this is the only time? This might be my last time, and I am sure this might be our last time for hearing.

After my friend in Philadelphia died his children gave his church libble to me, and I read it; I looked over it with much interest. I saw in the margin some things which I thought strange and said this morning, that the most precious thing in all God's universe is the sinner about to perish." I did not remember saying it, but it is true, and I say it now, whether I said it then or not. I am not speaking in the name of God's universe; that I think I should perish. Twelve gates wide open. Have you not heard how Christ bore sorrows and how sympathetic He is with all our woes? Have you not seen how He has made a way for the sinner and all the agonies of hell upon his breast? "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do." By it at blazed of the mountain day, by it a back whipped until the sun came out, by it a man was freed from slavery for the hands and two for the feet, by it his sinner, in which for the first time for 73 years the cruel world

let him alone, and by the heaven from which he now bends in compassion, offering pardon and peace and life eternal to all - our souls, I beg of you put down your ail at His feet.

I saw one hanging on a tree
In agony and blood,
Who fixed his languid eyes on me
As near his cross I stood.
Oh, never till my latest breath
Will I forget that look.
It seemed to charge me with his death,
Though not a word he spoke.

[illegible]

The second time the death warrant was on its way. The disguised wayfarer came to a place where broad meadows and little wood, starting on acacia moors, and they say: "Poor man, to have to go out on such a stormy night. It is dark and you will lose your way." He turned back, and said: "I will not!" He braved on and stopped amid the hedges and waited for the horseman to come carrying the mailbags containing the money.

The mail carrier spurred on his horse, and he saw the wayfarer waiting for him as he was fearful because of what had occurred on the former journey. Spurred on his steed, when suddenly he saw the stones and branches in the darkness there was a flash of fire, the arms, and the horse became unmanageable, and as the mail carrier discharged his pistol in fear, he fell from his saddle, and the disguised wayfarer flung him, and he lay on the ground.

"On the breast of the overthrown rider and said, "Surrender now!" The mail carrier surrendered his arms, and the wayfarer put upon his shoulders the mailbags, and led the horse and sped away into the darkness, gaining 14 more days for the poor prisoner, Sir John Cochrane, and the disguised wayfarer.

He had come from the prison again, the prison always open, and Sir John Cochrane was free. One day when he was standing amid his friends, a disguised wayfarer appeared, and he said: "The wayfarer appears," and he said: "Admit him right away."

The disguised wayfarer came in and said: "Here are two letters. Read them, sir, and cast them into the fire." And he took the letters, and read them, and there were his two death warrants, and he threw them into the fire. Then said Sir John Cochrane: "To whom am I indebted? Who is this poor wayfarer that saved my life? Who is he?" And he answered him: "He is the devil, the off the jerkin and cloak and the hood, and, lo, it was Grizel, the daughter of Sir John Cochrane." "Gracious heaven!" he cried, "my child, my saviour, my own Grizel!" But a more terrible storm of darkness descended upon him, and came forth from the King of Heaven and earth. The death warrant read, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." The death warrant coming on the black horse came on the white horse, must be. "Ye have died. Not breathe the storm and putting out the darkness was a disguised wayfarer who gripped by the bridle the oncoming doom and flung it back and pulled the wretched and bleeding foot on the wretched and bleeding horse. The lashes from the throne, and, Go free! Upon the gate! Strike off the chain! No! And to-day you liberated the soul stands in the presence of the disguised wayfarer, and as he pulls off the hood, the death warrant reads, "He disguise of his thorns, and the disguise of the seamless robe, you find he is bone of your bone, flesh of your flesh, your brother, your Christ, your saviour, your eternal life. Let all be one, and be one, and be one, and be one. Victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

A guilty, weak and helpless worm.
On thy kind arm I fall.
Be thou my strength and righteousness,
My Jesus and my all.

He is said to have killed him by causing melted gold to be poured down his throat in derision of his avarice, 85 B. C. Mithridates was defeated by Pompey, 66 B. C.

It is not generally known, even in California, that millions of dollars are annually taken from the rude heaps of base-looking quartz by the flowing of water over huge piles of broken rocks that contain the precious metal. The process of robbing the earth of its gold has now been reduced to such a fine point that the gentle flow of water over the ore gleams it of its golden treasures, and this works well in cases where the old chloride and other methods are not so useful.

The water, used by miners in bringing gold from piles of mineral-bearing quartz is charged with a simple chemical, which has the potency to dissolve gold and hold it in solution. The sparkling liquid, which flows over hundreds of tons of quartz, trickles through the mines and seeks its level, laden with gold, is charged with a deadly poison, cyanide of potassium, a drug which ferrets out the minutest particles of the yellowish metal and dissolves them and brings the precious burden to the vats for conversion into refined gold again.

The cyanide process is as noiseless and unerring as the laws of gravitation. The method is based on the fact that even a very weak solution cyanide of potassium dissolves gold and silver, forming, respectively, auro-potassic cyanide and argento-potassic cyanide. The solution is separated from the solid material, and the gold and silver are precipitated in the metallic form. In the last five years the process has been introduced into almost every gold field in California and elsewhere, and more than twenty millions of dollars have been recovered by the gentle flow of the waters charged with the magical chemical.

Precipitation is effected by the use of fine pieces of zinc, so arranged that when the rich waters flow over them the fine gold clusters in rich deposits over the zinc, for which it has an affinity. The gold deposits itself in the form of fine dust on the plates of zinc.—Boston Journal of Commerce.

THURSDAY, Jan. 30, 1896.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

We are authorized to announce CHAS. T. BYRD, of Campton, as a candidate for the office of Circuit Court Clerk for Wolfe county, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

LACONIC LIVE NEWS.

The supervisors of Morgan county have raised the taxable property of that county $50,000.

Judge James H. Mulligan, consul general to Samoa, arrived in Lexington on Sunday, and on Monday evening was banqueted at the Noverre cafe.

Barney J. Treacy, one of the best known turfmen and trotting horse men in America, made an assignment at Lexington last week for the benefit of creditors.

The court of appeals affirmed the death sentence of Henry Smith, colored, of Lexington. Smith's crime was criminal assault, committed on the person of Mrs. Henderson.

Cuban affairs have materially changed within the last few days, and it now looks as if the Insurgents will be defeated just when it was hoped they would gain their independence.

William E. Schlemmer, a faith healer, has been making some very remarkable cures of chronic diseases at and near Anton, Ohio, and from newspaper reports is becoming as famous as our own Sol Adams.

Senators Frank J. Cannon and Arthur Brown, of the new state of Utah, took the oath of office in the U. S. senate chamber on Monday, the former drawing the term ending March 13, 1899, and the latter the term expiring March 13, 1897.

"Next" was not heard in a Chicago barber shop Saturday night, as is the usual custom, because the six girl barbers went on a strike. The sweetheart of one had called to escort her to a ball, when the proprietor ejected him. Hence the strike.

We acknowledge the receipt of the Arkansas Kicker, published at Hardy, Arkansas, and note among other things that it publishes "The Little Country Town," a poem which originated with this paper, (we didn't write it,) and from indications is likely to become as famous as THE HERALD.

Thomas Foreman, a prominent business man of Lexington, and the late Republican candidate for mayor of that city, died suddenly of heart disease Saturday morning while at the breakfast table, aged 55 years. Mr. Foreman began life a very poor boy, but by strict industry and business integrity won wealth in every venture he made and above all the esteem of his fellow-men.

Since this paper made the announcement a few weeks ago that Hon. W. M. Beckner, of Winchester, would probably be a candidate for congress from this district, the papers generally have spoken in the most favorable terms of that gentleman, and we but voice the sentiment of the masses when we maintain that he is the strongest man yet mentioned. During the short time he served in the national legislature he proved his worth as a worker and the people will return him, or we are much mistaken.

Wood Dunlap, of Lexington, and one of the most prominent young Republicans in Kentucky, has authorized the announcement that he will be a candidate for delegate-at-large from Kentucky to the National Republican convention. Mr. Dunlap is one of the cleverest fellows that ever affiliated with the Republican party and we should like to see him get the nomination.

Mary Nellis, wife of the man, and Edward Gardner, barkeeper, and her paranoir, have been detected in an attempt to do Peter H. Nellis, proprietor of the Avenue hotel at Erie, Penn., by slow poison. Nellis carries a $10,000 insurance policy, and this mixed with the illicit love of the couple, is supposed to have instigated the crime.

HON. W. J. SEITZ FOR MCKINLEY.

A Prominent Mountain Republican Voices the Sentiment of His Section.

Hon. W. J. Seitz, of West Liberty, has been here for several days. Mr. Seitz is one of the most prominent in the Republican ranks of the Tenth Kentucky district. He will run for congress in that district this fall. He says he is ardently for sound money and protection and will make them issues of his campaign.

Mr. Seitz has business interests in the mountain section and travels over 14 of the 16 counties in the district. In discussing the situation there as to its choice for Republican presidential nominees, Mr Seitz said:

"My district is unquestionably for William McKinley for president. He is the first and only choice of the Tenth district, and is as sure to get its votes as the convention is held."

"Of course," continued Mr. Seitz, "if a time should come in the convention when the nomination of Gov. Bradley is probable or possible, the Tenth district would be glad to honor him with its votes, but as a direct issue between the other presidential candidates, nine men out of ten are for McKinley first, last and always."

"McKinley, in the eyes of the people of Kentucky, is the ideal candidate for president. His position on the currency question and protection, his absolutely clean official and personal record, his splendid mastery of all public questions and his perfect independence of political combines and political machines, make him the central figure of the Republican party and of American politics. I regard his nomination on the first ballot at St. Louis as an absolute certainty."

"What position will your district take as to a delegate from the state at large?" asked the reporter.

"Why, it will support no man not recognized as a supporter of McKinley. Of course, if the delegate has announced for Bradley first and McKinley second, that will be all right. We will not object to that. But we will support no man who is non-committal as to second choice or committed to any other than McKinley. The people of my district do not believe that Kentucky should send a 'trading' delegation to St. Louis, and they propose to know precisely how every delegate stands toward McKinley. It is only a question of allowing the people to express an opinion, and they propose to do it."

"McKinley will sweep the country as no man has in a generation. He always runs ahead of his ticket. The Ohio legislature in 1890 gerrymandered his district, making it Democratic by 3,200 and the Democrats nominated Lieutenant Governor Warwick, their strongest man, against him. In spite of the tidal wave that year that gave the Democrats 140 majority in congress, McKinley was beaten by only 285 in that enormously Democratic district."

"In 1891 he was nominated for governor and ran ahead of his ticket. In 1893 he made the second race for governor and won by 85,000, then the largest majority ever given in Ohio in a time of peace. In 1895 he threw his personality into the campaign, stumped every district and county and helped pile up 100,000 majority for Gen. Bushnell."

"I am personally acquainted with Gov. McKinley and I can say that if the convention nominates McKinley the Republican party will not have to apologize or explain a single act in official career or private life. With McKinley as our candidate we will sweep the north and south."—Staff cor. Lexington Leader.

THE HERALD,

HAZEL GREEN, KY.

THIS SORRY WORLD.

Lots o' folks a-weepin' mournin'; some folks puts it on their hats; Others have a secret sorrow hid away too deep for that.

Some remind us of their troubles 'th a lot o' gloomy clothes. While there's some at mourns unheeded by a grave nobody knows.

There is funeral occurin' all about us every day. Where the heart o' man or woman lays a tender hope away.

There is faces that is smilin'; there is lips 'at laugh an' jest 'th a wish as dear as Heaven buried jest inside the breast.

Love an' doubt an' joy an' sorrow came as sort o' tangled web. Can't guess of yer next door neighbor's in a sweet or bitter cup.

Why a man is glad or gloomy—ay, it's pretty hard to tell. You may think he got a picnic when he's at a funeral.

So ef you should meet a feller 'th the sun-der on his face, Don't unfold yer cloud o' trouble like a terrible eclipse.

Though he may be bright and cheerful he's grief an' sorrow, too. Only 'th a too kind an' thoughtful for to dump it out on you.

—Nixon Winter, in L. A. W. Bulletin.

THEIR PUNISHMENT.

LIGHT was falling on the valley between the snow-capped peaks. The mountain tops, however, were still bathed in the splendid rosy light with which the Alps are colored every day of the setting sun. These brilliant peaks made the shadows, which crowded over the little town, timidly hanging over the rocks, appear blacker and more silent.

The Anglican bell rang from the tower of the old abbey. Within the slow chant of vespers rose from the choir benches of blackenedholm oak, over which the sanctuary lamp cast its flickering light.

Away down the dark nave, quite dark and deserted, a woman was praying. Was she praying, or was she merely lost in the intense melancholy of the hour and place? Kneeling on the stone, she had fallen, her arms lowered, her hands crossed, in an inert and wearied attitude.

The darkness of the place and the black veil that covered her head concealed the expression of her face. However, whether she was praying or whether she was wrapt in reverie, she was so absorbed that she did not perceive that the evening song was over, nor did she hear the soft steps of the monks who were leaving.

Suddenly the stillness was broken by the tinkling of a bunch of keys which echoed through the church, while a voice cried out:

"We close!"

Hearing this, the lady rose hastily and withdrew, gathering about her waist as she went the long black cloak which covered her tall and slender figure. She left the church and as she passed along the narrow streets of the village the few passers-by turned to look at her with a curious curiosity, but yet without actual wonder.

Every day at the same hour for 18 years had that same lady been seen passing by, wrapped in her black cloak, her face covered with her tall black veil. For 18 years her mysterious presence in that far-off valley had furnished a subject for the imagination and gossip of the inhabitants. And yet, little by little, before that impenetrable mystery, imaginations had ceased to work and tongues were now reduced to silence.

Accompanied by her husband, she had arrived one evening, as already stated, about 15 years previous to the time we are describing. They had come alone, without servants and with little baggage. They had alighted at the hotel, where they lived for several months while the house they had bought on the outskirts of the town was being repaired. It was a pretty cottage, surrounded by a full garden of roses.

From the day they had settled in that very modest abode they had led a quiet life. They were known as Signor and Signora Nicholson, but on their silver plate there was a monogram bearing a crown.

What could be their motive for concealing their name? How had they come to that remote corner of the world? Why did they not wish to see anyone, either relative or friend? Why did they live alone, as if they had come from some other planet? They were, indeed, kind to all and charitable to the poor. But their kindness kept people at a distance, and when they opened their purse it was apparently without feeling.

The husband, a tall, strong man, with an almost athletic physique, appeared at the time of their arrival to be about 30 years of age, his wife not more than went hunting, or took long walks, always alone. She wandered among the trees of her garden, and every day, morning and evening, she went to the abbey and came back, walking with the same slow and mechanical step. They received papers, magazines, books, but never a letter.

Both seemed sad, of a gloomy and desolate sort of sadness, which those who approached them felt themselves. Many a servant, indeed, had gone away, unable to endure that loneliness. It is certain that they never wrangled nor spoke harshly; on the contrary, there was always between them a dead silence, interrupted only by those short phrases which daily contact made necessary.

Reaching the garden gate, as if fighting an inward repugnance, the lady stopped and passed by. Then she turned back and again passed the gate. At last she entered.

In the hall she found a servant, who on the mute question of her look answered:

"Still in the same condition, signora."

She put her cloak and bonnet on the rack and went upstairs. There she stopped, hesitating again, before one of the doors on the first floor. Opening it rudely, she entered a large, dismal room. Here on an iron bed, a bed befitting a soldier, lay her husband.

Solemnly she drew near, listened to the sick man's heavy and painful breathing, and, bending over him, she tried to see his face.

Little by little, her eyes growing accustomed to the darkness, she could perceive his convulsed and livid features, his cheeks furrowed with red veins. His heavy eyelids were half closed, his nose, drawn and emaciated, stood out above his blue, half-opened lips, from which came a short, whistling breath. He was dying.

A woman who had been watching at the bedside had left the room as soon as the signora had come in. And now the latter was alone with the dying man, gazing on that human face that held her in subjugation so many years and that was now fading away. This hour, looked forward to for 18 years, this hour longed for, prayed for in the silent revolt of her widowed heart, the hour of her liberty, had come at last.

The lady seated herself and let her mind run once more to the past.

It was the old, old story. She met a young man. Their souls blended. At first it was innocent friendship; then the steps of passion. One day her husband, returning home, had found them together, their hands clasped!

Oh, the terrible recollection! The thought of it made the blood rush to her heart, and she again felt the same shame, same terror, which had wholly overpowered her before her judge's revolver and stern face.

Everything had suddenly assumed a strange rapidity. She had faced her husband crying: "Mercy! mercy! I promise to never see him again!"

Her husband had hesitated a moment; had looked at them, crushing them under the weight of his contempt; then, without lowering his revolver, had dictated these conditions:

"Promise on the gospel, on your eternal life, that you will never see this creature again, that you will obey me in all, and that you will accept the punishment which I may please to inflict."

In the anguish of her fear and love she had promised, word for word, what he had insisted upon.

In a sign of her husband the young man, humiliated and vilified, had departed and her expiation had begun.

Her husband had resigned his command in the army and had gone to live last.

PARSONS BY TURNED TO LOOK AT HER. on that mountain slope, assuming a false name, hiding his secret from all. Like two stones that fell to the bottom of the sea, they had disappeared from society without leaving any trace. Twice a year she wrote to her mother. Her husband read her letters, would mail them himself in some far-off place. Finally her mother had died, and from that day no letters were sent.

In that terrible isolation she had gone through all the stages of despair. For several days she declined to eat, wishing to starve; but her inexorable judge had said to her:

"You are a Christian; you have promised to obey; therefore eat."

And she obeyed, because even in her excess of despair she could not resist the thought of suicide, the idea of falling in her promise had never crossed her mind. That promise was, in a certain sense, the supreme inheritance of her love, the painful life that belonged to the past.

As she had lived, hope alone remained. She hoped that her husband, after he had noticed her sweetness, docility and patience, would relent; and for many years she had observed his pensive forehead day by day, waiting to see on it a sign of forgiveness.

He never treated her rudely, he never allowed himself to be wanting in respect to her, nor to speak to her harsh or sharp words. Only once, having found her sobbing in a fit of despair, he had said to her:

"My life is no better than yours, yet I have betrayed no one."

He had, in fact, sacrificed everything—his ambition, career, family, pleasures—to bury himself with her, in the same atonement.

She had hoped, but in vain. Days, weeks, years had gilded on an inflexible monotony; self-control vanished; she became the sport of moods, according to the time and humor—now weary of life, now tormented by remorse, now irritated and full of hatred. How many a time she had said to herself:

"He is old and I am young; he will die and I shall be free. When shall I be free?"

And now he was dying. At this thought she felt a strange spirit-like feeling, which startled her. At last she felt a kind of intoxication in her brain, and rose, feeling the need to stretch her arm to the cross.

As she went to the moon, which was high above the horizon, sent its pale rays through the window she went to lean against the mantelpiece, seized with a kind of uneasiness. She turned her face to the mirror, and stood there looking at herself. She was still beautiful.

Then her lips parted with a smile. Those who had known her would know her still. But who would still remember her? And what had become of her friends, of her acquaintances?

And what had become of him? At this question she felt herself seized upon by fear; not that she would appeal to him less handsome, or that she had been forgotten. She feared that she might find him unlike the man she had left in her heart; that she might find him changed physically and morally and not recognize him; that she might be a stranger to her.

As she thought these things she saw before herself in the mirror, feebly illuminated by the reflection of the moon, two dilated eyes gazing on her like coils. Being affrighted by the gaze of the dying man, who seemed as if he wanted to follow her in her giddy reverie, she turned with an irresistible motion and went toward the bed, obeying, in spite of herself, a kind of imperious and magnetic call.

Then it seemed to her as if a deep and desperate voice came from that face which was growing stone-like.

"I have loved you, I have worshipped you all my life, and you have betrayed me. For years and years I have waited with a painful desire a word that would put balm on my bleeding wound, but you have let me suffer. I was innocent and shared your expiation. I took on me half of your punishment, hoping that at least repentance would come to you. beamed with serenity, his eyelids lowered and his dim eyes, while the only two tears which she had ever seen flowing from these severe eyes came down his cheeks, already cold.

Those two tears, which he had wiped away, and a great peace descended upon his heart.

She opened the window, saw the starry heavens above the snowy peaks, and over which she had looked so often to the deep valley, she sat down, as if she saw it for the first time, that prison where her life would be spent. She knew that, to keep her promise, so that she should bring the lovers of former days together, it was necessary that she should remain exile from all, unknown, forgotten forever.

The tomb, which had opened for an instant, had closed forever, and closed in peace.—Boston Transcript.

TWO DYED BURGLARS.

The LUDICROUS RESULT of an Attempted Robbery.

A good story is told of the way in which a dyer treated two burglars that he caught in the establishment as they were in the act of making off with some valuable dye. Mr. S., the owner of the color works, is often engaged in experiments late in the evening in the chemical laboratory, which opens into the room where the great dye vats are.

The thieves made their visit, as it chanced, on one of the nights when Mr. S. was sleeping at the laboratory. He is naturally a light sleeper, and a little past midnight he was aroused by the sound of voices in the vatroom. He saw the flash of a light, and, suspecting thieves, arose quietly on his sofa, took his revolver, and, concealed in the darkness, watched the movements of the two men. He saw that they bore a package of new and valuable dye.

Thinking that matters had progressed far enough, he stepped forward, cocked his revolver, and said, quietly: "I have a use for those dyes. You'd better leave them alone."

The thieves, taken completely by surprise, dropped their plunder and started to run, leaping from the side of one vat to the next. In the darkness one of them miscalculated the distance and fell headlong into the indigo vat, and his companion, hurrying to the splash, glanced back to see what had occurred, lost his balance, and toppled into the same vat.

"That's all right," said Mr. S., half-jocosely, as he stepped to the edge of the vat and covered the thieves with his revolver. "You can't get any more out of that indigo to dye your clothes and your skin. You needn't hurry about getting out. We must give the dye a chance to take effect."

For 15 minutes or more he kept the two men in the vat, while he calmly planned the best way of getting the indigo, and came up spluttering and choking, and finally begged for mercy.

"Well," remarked Mr. S., good-naturedly, "I think you probably are as blue out there as I feel inside, so I won't let you longer."

"And now," changing his tone to one of stern command, "if you don't want the police on your tracks you'll make yourself scarce in this town. Out now, and be on your way."

Without a word the two men climbed out of the vat and hastened away.

A few days later a friend from an adjoining town called on Mr. S. and mentioned incidentally that two men came to see him and offered him five dollars to tell them what would remove indigo stains from the skin. "They were the bluest-looking fellows you ever saw," he added. "They said they got fooling in the dye house and fell into the vat."—Philadelphia Times.

A Terrible Scene.

What a picture of desolation wherever you turn your eyes! And all through the giddy excitement of the giddy individual! Railway carriages overturned, some of them broken to matchwood, buried under their human bodies horribly mutilated, the ground strewn with shreds of clothing, horses, sheep and dogs with heads and limbs torn off; a heap of broken chairs, cupboards, mirrors, pictures and utensils of every description, engine and tender with smashed wheels, the funnel hurled to a great distance, lying amid the horribly mutilated limbs, everywhere new sights to make one's blood curdle. Yet no sound is heard, no cry for help, no groans of pain, for you are standing in the nursery and it is entirely owing to the carelessness that the little ones have treated their toys so unmercifully.—Lancet Times.

A Break in the Chain.

At a certain point in the history of Halifax it used to be the duty custom for the scholars to repeat the Apostles' Creed, one beginning: "I believe in God, the Father Almighty, the next going on Mark on heaven and earth," and so on, turn and turn about, the creed was concluded. It was also usual for the scholars to occupy the same place day after day, so that a boy always repeated exactly the same bit of creed.

This arrangement led to rather amusing scenes on dry days, when one of the pupils happened to be absent.

The creed was said as usual until they came to the passage: "I believe in the Holy Ghost," when the boy who turned, and then said: "The Holy Spirit is at the bottom of the sea."—London Telegraph.

PERSONAL AND IMPERSONAL.

—London's new mayor, Sir Walter Wilkin, made his fortune by the sale of German yeast. In view of Sir Walter's probable elevation to a baronetcy at the expiration of his term of office, a political antagonist remarked: "We have Wilkin would make a fine motto for the Wilkin family."

—Mrs. Catherine C. McDonald, of Maspeth, L. I., who was educated in the Perkins institute for the blind, South Boston, originated the thought of a home for blind women, and funds, interested other women, and has at last realized the fruition of her hopes and plans. A home has been opened at Maspeth under favorable auspices.

—Isabella and Sallie Broadbent, two Florida girls who gave valuable assistance in rescuing the crew of the wrecked Norwegian ship Catherine, in August, 1891, have received silver lockets and chains from King, Queen, Norway and Sweden. The lockets are inscribed with the crown and monogram of the king, and the words, "For a Noble Deed."

—King Oscar, of Sweden and Norway, recently appeared in a new way at the performance given by Stuart Cumberland in Stockholm. Mr. Cumberland does not know Swedish, and his interpreter failed to appear; so the world's king in Japan, who is a portion of his services, and explained things to the crowded audience with surprising ease and fluency.

—Miss Francis Abdullah, the daughter of an Arab chief, established, January 1, 1911, the Northern India Farm Co. at Allahabad, India, which has achieved remarkable success. She also instituted the All Abdullah stables, an equine home, and the Zoo memorial institute, a temporary home for gentlewomen seeking employment, and has a woman of strong individuality, and very persevering.

—Count Oguma, who is the most willing talker and promoter in Japan, is still advertising his scheme for a great world's fair in Japan in 1915 or the year following. He thinks it will be a great advertisement of Japan's resources and progress, and would vastly stimulate commerce with the outside world. His plan is to include a portion of the Chinese indemnity fund—say, 10,000,000 yen—set aside for this exposition.

—Miss Helen A. Whittier has for some years been the proprietor and active manager of a large cotton mill in Lowell, Mass. She is building a large mill at the south, and intends that the product of her southern mill shall be of the coarser and cheaper fabrics, which can be made there to good advantage, and is inferior to the best made in Massachusetts are exclusively occupied with the finer grades of manufacture.

—"Do you ever catch any whales, captain?" asked the fair passenger on the Ocean liner. "Often enough," answered the dignified captain. "How very wonderful! Please tell me how you catch them." "We drop a few of the old salts on their tails, ma'am."—Chicago Tribune.

—"Mother, I'm sorry." "Why did you tell that to the teacher?" Johnny. "To save somebody from punishment." Mother (mollified)—"I knew there must be some extenuating circumstance. Who was it you tried to save from punishment?" Johnny—"Myself."—Tit-Bits.

—"What kind of a man is Skinner?" Does he do much in the way of entertaining?" "Entertaining! Why, Skinner is a good enough fellow in his way, but he thinks too much of his money to spend it in feeding people. Really, I don't believe Skinner is hospitable enough to entertain a grudge."—Boston Transcript.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 24, 1896.

Nothing of a startling nature accompanied the holding of the national silver conference in Washington this week. Nearly one hundred ardent and enthusiastic friends of silver held secret sessions and ratified the determination reached at the last conference to hold a national convention and put a national silver ticket in the field. The silver men in congress were conspicuous by their absence, and it was probably their absence which caused Senator Steward, who took part in the conference, to say that there were men in congress talking silver who were traitors to the cause. The delegates to the silver conference expressed confidence that the silver men in the Republican and Democratic parties would nearly all go to the new party after their national conventions, unless one or the other of them should put a silver plank in their platform, which is not regarded as probable. The Republicans are not willing to be swallowed by the silver party, because they think they are in a better condition to do the swallowing, having shown a strength of 1,000,000 votes, while the strength of the new party is yet to be shown.

The Monroe doctrine is still capable of furnishing sensations in order. The reporting of the resolution affirming that doctrine, by the senate committee in foreign relations, had nothing sensational about it, although many who thoroughly believe in the doctrine thought its wording somewhat unfortunate, and unnecessarily explicit. But it has been followed by several sensational features. There is an apparently concerted effort on the part of a coterie of big newspapers to stir up opposition to the resolution and the administration, which started the whole Monroe doctrine discussion, is using its influence to prevent the resolution being pushed to a vote, on the ground that its adoption would endanger the peaceful settlement of the Venezuela squabble. But the greatest sensation was the speech of Senator Wolcott, of Colorado, attacking not only the resolution reported to the senate, but the Monroe doctrine itself. The stock of sensations in this question is not yet exhausted, either.

While the urgency deficiency bill, which carries $3,242,562 to meet deficiencies in the regular appropriations for United States courts, and nearly a million and a half more to meet other deficiencies, and which was this week passed by the house, was under discussion, there was some very plain talk by members about the manner in which these courts are run, and especially about the abuses of the fee system. To show that cases are "made" for the fees, Representative Swanson, of Virginia, called attention to the fact that more than 45 per cent of the suits brought in the United States courts are dismissed. Representative Lacey, of Iowa, declared the whole system to be honeycombed with fraud, and said that judges appointed for life did not always feel a keen desire to reduce expenditures, because they sometimes helped to fatten on the spoils. He said there was one man in Arkansas who held the office of clerk of United States district court, clerk of the circuit court and clerk to the United States commissioner, and drew over $12,000 a year in fees.

The action of Comptroller Bowler, in holding up the sugar bounty appropriation, is going to be investigated by the house judiciary committee, as soon as the house adopts a resolution reported from that committee, authorizing the investigation.

The senate passed 65 bills in less than two hours one day this week, but they were all bills which had no opposition and, while important to those directly interested, were not of general importance.

Members of the house are beginning to speculate on the probability of an unusually early adjournment for a long session. If the senate was as thoroughly controlled as the house is, an early adjournment would be easily served at him as it is the Fourth of July is likely to find congress in session.

It was said that a resolution calling upon the European powers to interfere to protect the Christians of Armenia, as they have a right to do, from Turkish brutality and oppression, should be reported to the senate on the same day that Mrs. Clara Barton, president of the Red Cross Society, sailed from New York to attempt to carry relief contributed by citizens of the United States to the suffering Armenians, although the Sultan of Turkey has said that she should not enter Armenia.

It is evident that an understanding exists between the administration and those who control the foreign committee of the house and senate on the question of recognizing the belligerency of the Cuban revolutionists. Secretary Olney has furnished those committees with all the information the administration has on the subject, but it is the opinion of those who ought to know best that no move will be made in congress to compel the president to act before he wishes to.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is famous for its cures of bad colds. It opens the secretions, relieves the lungs and aids nature in restoring the system to a healthy condition. If freely used as soon as the cold has been contracted, and before it has become settled in the system, it greatly lessens the severity of the attack and has often cured in a single day what would have been a severe cold. For sale by John M. Rose.

ERREKA CHEMICAL AND MFG CO., LA CROSE, WIS.
Dear Sir—I have been a tobacco smoker for many years, and during the past two years have smoked fifteen to twenty cigars regularly every day. My whole nervous system became affected, until my physician told me I must give up the use of tobacco for the time being, at least. I tried the so-called "Keeley Cure," "No-To-Bac," and various other remedies, but all failed. I then considered your preparation, and today I consider myself completely cured; I am in perfect health, and the horrible craving for tobacco, which every inveterate smoker fully appreciates, has completely left me. I consider your "Baco-Curo" simply wonderful, and can fully recommend it. Yours very truly, C. W. HORNICK.
